On March 5, 1770, a British soldier being harassed by a mob who were angry about his presence as a parliamentary enforcer, fired a shot, prompting other soldiers to do the same. Five Americans ended up being killed. The depiction by Paul Revere, though not entirely accurate, displayed the growing resentment of the colonists.
Cut out each card and learn about the battles. Stack them shortest to longest and staple.

Revolutionary War Battles

- April, 1775
  - Shots fired at Lexington and Concord; Washington takes command

- December, 1775
  - Washington crosses the Delaware
British General John Burgoyne takes Fort Ticonderoga.

July, 1777

British General John Burgoyne surrenders at Saratoga.

October, 1777

October, 1781

British Lord Cornwallis surrenders at Yorktown, Virginia.